National Democratic Ticket.

For President,
WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN
Of Nebraska.For Vice President,
ARTHUR SEWALL
Of Maine.

It isn't every Hill that has a beacon light upon it.

William the Conqueror is bound to be elected president.

If Bryan is elected in November, will the Wolfert Rooster crow?

Mr. Cleveland may not be better than his new party, but he is bigger.

"Democracy is in a bad way," says an exchange. Yes, in McKinley's way.

If there were two of them, birds of a feather would flock together at Wolfert's Roost.

Thursday McKinley addressed a delegation from Homestead, Pa., representing schedule C.

England's long arm of the sea is reaching out toward the Dardanelles. Will it yet reach the Turk?

There is much talk of deposing the sultan, but in all Europe there is no more solid throne than his.

General Palmer is a revolutionist, at least he has revolved around the political circle more than any one of his time.

Major McKinley says he needs a rest and will go into retirement for a while. After November 3 he will have all eternity to rest in.

Mr. Cleveland's letter to Bill Bryan created about as much disturbance in the political sea as a drop of rain would create in Buzzard's bay.

Bourke Cockran should go south and talk about the "unreconciled slave holders." He would be given such a reception as he has not yet had.

Along with the golden apples which he feeds to the "National" or Filled Cheese, Democrats, McKinley keeps on throwing in a few tariff onions.

Mr. Powderly may be the friend of the laboring man, but, unfortunately, for his influence with him, he is standing shoulder to shoulder with the plutocrats.

With the approach of winter Mrs. Charlotte Smith's anti-bicycle crusade will seem to have some success. The advent of spring will show the sport as popular as ever.

To me the question of free trade is a question of humanity," says Major McKinley, "the voice of labor pleading for its own." Then why is he so opposed to it, why does he denounce it so?

The unemployed workman who doesn't happen to have the price of a special train on his person can notify Mr. McKinley by mail," says the Washington Post. And the return mail will bring with it an autograph letter of thanks.

The Louisville Courier-Journal has made the greatest discovery of the age, according to its own statement. The discovery is about Mr. Bryan. It has discovered that:

"He is a boy orator."
"He is a dishonest dodger."
"He is a daring adventurer."
"He is a political fakir."
"He is not of the material of which the people of the United States have ever made a president, nor is he even of the material of which any party has ever before made a candidate for the presidency."

November 4 it will discover that Bryan, the "boy orator," "the dodger," etc., has been elected president of the United States.

The Springfield Republican says that "Chester Alan Arthur, son of the late president of the United States, is revisiting New York after several years' absence. Arthur is a man of fashion who makes his home in London, because he says 'he can maintain a position in keeping with the dignity of the son of a president.' This remark scarcely commands respect. If he had said he lived in London because he liked to, there would be no criticism; but on the ground mentioned, it may be observed that the best way to sustain the dignity of the son of a worthy citizen of America is to stay at home and amount to something in the service of his country." Chetty has developed into a lovely little prig, anyway.

The original manuscript is in the Lenox library, New York. The Hamilton drafts are in the state department, Washington.
A hundred years hence people will not be spending any time reading Mr. Cleveland's farewell address.

CLEVELAND THEN AND NOW.

The Baltimore Sun says that "Cleveland was elected in 1892 because of his pronounced views on the money question; because of his opposition to silver; and because of his opposition to the tariff." In the first place, the campaign of 1892 was fought out largely on the tariff question. Very little was said by stump orators and the press relative to silver. The Republican party had saddled upon the people a tariff law so manifestly unjust that the force of the Democratic campaign was directed against that law to the exclusion of all other issues. In the second place, notwithstanding Mr. Cleveland's past record, the platform adopted tacitly recognized silver as a standard money. Indeed, the platform and Mr. Cleveland's letter of acceptance contained no such spirit of hostility to silver as Mr. Cleveland has displayed since his inauguration. Had Mr. Cleveland's platform and his letter of acceptance reflected any such hostile sentiment as he has displayed, notwithstanding the known convictions of the Republican candidate, results would have been different. Admitting that the platform was impervious in a degree, admitting that it tacitly compromised, and, strictly speaking, was not congruous with orthodox Democracy, still the most conservative voters, as to the policy likely to be pursued, placed Mr. Cleveland in a friendly attitude toward silver. It is revealing no secret to say that when he impetuously attacked silver, in his message convening congress in extra session to repeal the Sherman act, he visited bitter disappointment on a large majority of the people who voted for him. Then, and not until then, were the people cognizant of what was forthcoming. If Mr. Cleveland's standing is to be used to determine public sentiment on the money question, let his present standing be employed. He was elected in 1892 by a substantial majority. Today, after four years of open and pronounced antagonism to silver, were he a candidate, it is doubtful if he could carry one state in the Union.

QUEER KIND OF PROSPERITY.

In addressing a delegation of laboring men at Canton, Thursday, William McKinley is reported to have said: "You know that we were prosperous in 1892, and had been for preceding years." How prosperous? The public records show that in 1892 120,000 laboring men went on a strike. Of this number more than 60 per cent struck against a reduction of wages. The national census, completed about that time, showed that 4,000,000 people were out of employment, or nearly 7 per cent of the entire population. At no other period in the history of the government was labor in a more unsettled and restless condition, than in 1892. The history of that year, and of years immediately preceding, is a history of rapine, murder and conflagration. It is a history of strikes, riots, lawlessness, capitalistic oppression, lockouts and kindred social and industrial upheavals. Mr. McKinley's sophistry is exploded by history already written—history painful to remember, but infinitely difficult to forget. When he talks of prosperity at that trying time he exhibits either a lack of knowledge, as to prevalent industrial conditions, or looks lightly upon aspects which moved thousands of strong men to tears. When he talks of prosperity, in the light of current history, he discloses a lack of knowledge as to the past of which his party may well feel ashamed. Before anything more is said about the "prosperity of 1892" it would be well for Mr. McKinley's campaign manager to drop the curtain over the awful scenes enacted at that time. Such statements do not sound well when set against evidence to the contrary, like that to be found in Chicago, Cincinnati, Homestead and, in fact, all the great labor centers of the United States.

PREJUDICE AGAINST NEGROES.

The people generally are inclined to the opinion that all the prejudice against negroes in this country is in the south; it is not so. Not very long ago a negro bishop was refused admittance to a Boston hotel. One would think that if there were any place in all the country where this prejudice would have ceased to exist it would be in the home of Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison. Another case happened in Leavenworth, Kan., the other day, equally astonishing. Lieutenant Charles Young, Ninth cavalry, and the only colored officer in the army, was refused accommodations in the hotels of that place. He is a graduate of West Point, and was ordered to Fort Leavenworth for examination for promotion from a second to a first lieutenant. When Boston and Leavenworth hotels refuse accommodations to negroes, who are acknowledged by all to be gentlemen, is it at all surprising that they are refused the same accommodation at southern hotels? Is northern prejudice against negroes on a higher plane than southern prejudice against them?

MR. CLEVELAND AND THE DEMOCRACY.

The New York Evening Post says that for the first time in the history of the country a regularly nominated candidate of a great party for the presidency has been formally repudiated by the national administration of his party; that President Cleveland, his secretary of the treasury, his attorney general and all the other members of his cabinet make public announcement that they do not consider Mr. Bryan a true representative of the principles of their party; that they regard his candidacy as a menace to the national honor and welfare, and that they support heartily the Democratic ticket which has been nominated in opposition to him.

TALES OF THE DAY.

Had Their Eyes Open.
The interest in the silver question is widespread and everybody is ready to discuss it, even the street urchin. If any doubt this, let us go to the inquiry of Fred Vogel. The well-known druggist was standing on a corner near his North Side home recently, discussing the political situation. He doubted whether the silver men had as much strength as they claimed. They talk much of a future, he heard of, he said, "who asked a hotel keeper if he wanted to buy some frogs. Why, yes," said the keeper, "I can bring in a whole wagon load." "All right," responded the druggist, "bring them along." The next day came and the farmer only brought three frogs. "I thought there was a pair," he explained, "but when I came to catch them these were all I could find." While the laugh was going round a street urchin piped up and asked Mr. Vogel if he had heard about the gold bug and the dogs.

"No, what is it?"
"A goldbug saw two newtars with a couple of puppies. 'Who do they belong to?' he asked. 'McKinley,' was the answer. 'The man came along a few days later and saw the same group and again asked who the puppies belonged to. This time the newtars were Bryan.' 'Why, I asked you a few days ago whose puppies these were and you said 'McKinley.' 'Who's the difference?' the newtars said sharply. 'Why, you said I was a fool, they're not their eyes open—see?'
The last laugh was on the other side.—Minneapolis Times.Love-Making in Town.
"One hears a great deal about country sweethearts holding each other's hands as they stroll languidly through the village streets," said a man from the country. "But I've seen more of that sort of love-making in New York in a day than I have ever seen in a week in any other city or in a year in any small town. You can scarcely ride a hook on a surface or elevated car without seeing a half-dozen couples sitting with clasped hands or with the masculine arm around the feminine waist and an interchange of love-looks that are more melting than the atmosphere."
"I was an involuntary witness to a little love scene at the side door of an uptown hotel a few days ago that seemed to be a scene from a comic opera acted on the street."
"It was standing on the corner waiting for a car when I noticed a young fellow walking up and down before the side entrance of a hotel and stopping every now and then to look in. He was evidently waiting for some one and he seemed very impatient because he had to wait so long. Suddenly a young woman, apparently a chambermaid, tripped out of the side passage, hurried down the steps and almost rushed at the expectant young lover. He caught her in his arms and kissed her with a smack that startled the pedestrians. It was a genuine scene from a little love drama, for the young woman blushed like a peony when she saw that the trust was perceived by dozens of people on the street and she clung to her sweetheart's arm and hurried him away. It was equal to a play."—New York Times.
